400 ministerial students prepare to serve churches

"Our Bible program focuses on what the Bible says, not what people say about the Bible," says Dr. Harry Nonnemacher, dean of PCC's Bible division. "We balance solid training in the Word of God with Christian service outreach and pastoral internships. Ministerial students go beyond the classroom into a ministry setting, where they practice what they're learning." Ministering to others means responding to God's call to help meet people's spiritual needs, and PCC's ministerial students develop servants' hearts by responding to the needs of people around them.

From the President

Dr. Arlin Horton

The Role of the Campus Church

The local church is the center of God's program today. The church is "the pillar and ground of the truth" (1 Tim. 3:15). A Christian college education must include consistent exposure to a New Testament church. Faithful church attendance is a spiritual discipline that needs to be cultivated during the college years if it is going to be maintained during adulthood. The Campus Church plays a vital role in the spiritual training of PCC's student body. In a recent letter, a pastor described the importance of the Campus Church in the lives of his children who are PCC students. He wrote,

"When my wife and I planned for our children to attend PCC many years ago, we were concerned about their church situation. Some have criticized the Campus Church concept, especially in independent Baptist circles. The gripe being that it isn't 'local church' enough. This was a great concern of mine. However, I have found this to be an unnecessary concern. I have been an independent Baptist pastor for more than 20 years and believe in the local church with all my heart. I have been very pleased with the ministry, the stand, and the pastor of the Campus Church. There has been a degree of loyalty maintained by our students to the local church concept and to their own home church. Their allegiance has not shifted away from their home church while attending PCC. They love the Campus Church and support it faithfully, but they have kept a loyalty to their Lord, their family, and their local church heritage."

PCC students enjoy the spiritual vibrancy of the Campus Church, which provides a warm local church atmosphere. The Campus Church, which operates in the spirit of an independent Baptist church, acquaints students with the workings of a separated Bible-believing church and encourages them in their worship and service for the Lord.

Sunday School, the Sunday morning and evening services, and Wednesday midweek service are all times of spiritual instruction and encouragement. Faculty, staff, and their families—as well as many local townspeople—join the college students in services at the Campus Church. When you are planning to visit the College, be sure to arrange your schedule so you can be our guest at the Campus Church. We believe your heart will be blessed.

"Unto him be glory in the church ..." Eph. 3:21

PCC Wrestlers Capture National Title

Eagles move up to NCWA competition

PCC Eagles wrestlers competed in their first National Collegiate Wrestling Association tournament and emerged as national champions. Yale University, Texas A & M, Auburn University, Georgia Tech, Louisiana State University, University of Texas, and University of Georgia were among 28 schools participating in the NCWA tournament.

"This is a much larger tournament than we've competed in before," says Coach Jim Hazewinkel, in his eighth year as PCC's wrestling coach. "It includes schools from all over the nation, and it's a tougher level of wrestling. Winning the first time we entered was really exciting for us."

◀ Eagles wrestlers claim fifth national tournament victory in six years.

Judah Keenan (Wis.) pins his opponent.

“Pleasing the Lord with our praise”

“Our goal as individuals and as a couple is to please the Lord with our praise in all aspects of a performance, including our hearts, words, music, and technique,” Ray and Ann Gibbs affirm. “We are privileged to work with some of the finest students, faculty, and staff anywhere, and we are delighted when we see our students not just perform, but truly minister.”

Ray Gibbs’ career took off after completing college at San Diego State University and earning his master’s degree from the Manhattan School of Music. Soon after his debut with the Metropolitan Opera in New York, Ray was established as one of the company’s leading tenors. Ann Perkins, who had graduated from Wesleyan College in Macon, Georgia, and earned her master's degree from the University of New Mexico. Though saved at age 12, Ann blamed God for her rheumatoid arthritis, contracted at an early age, which almost kept her from walking. She was a bitter, backslidden, very career-oriented Christian.

Ann and accompanist Holly Falls (Ala.) discuss an arrangement.

In Memphis, Ann renewed a friendship with a childhood friend, who had married a local Baptist preacher. The two couples quickly became close friends. The Gibbss were impressed by their friends' desire to learn about their music in order to understand exactly what Ray and Ann did and why. "They loved us to the Lord," Ann shares. "They never confronted us or asked us to change our appearance or conduct. They simply accepted us as we were. At the same time, they invited us to church where we could see that we were missing something. During that time, we were never asked to sing in church. They cared more about our souls than our voices." After a few months, Ann realized her sin of bitterness, accepted God's forgiveness, and rededicated her life to the Lord. A short time later, Ray was saved.

Ray and Ann continued to pursue music careers during the next several years. During that time, Ray struggled with the idea of surrendering not just his soul but his career to the Lord. He finally did, and the Lord began to change his heart. During his best year professionally, the Lord caused him to see things in a new way. "Then when I was ready, the Lord took away my professorship at Memphis State," Ray remembers. "My manager died, and I lost all my professional contacts. It seemed the Lord closed the door on every career prospect."

In the summer of 1983, Ray and Ann taught at PCC's summer graduate music program. Later, at a Christian conference, Ray and Ann's availability for Christian concerts was announced. For the next eight years, following the Lord's direction, they traveled and sang in churches across the country, and the Lord blessed their ministry. They saw many decisions in their services, and the Lord continued to teach them to live by faith. "Love offerings didn't always add up on paper," Ray recalls, "but our bills were always paid." Their daughter, Christina, was born in 1985, and Ann home schooled her with A Beka Book materials.

During the 1980s, Ray and Ann came to PCC several times to perform in Artist Series concerts. In spring 1989, Ray directed PCC's first opera, The Elixir of Love. The Lord was blessing their traveling music ministry so much that when Dr. Horton invited them to come to PCC as artists in residence, they wondered how they could graciously decline the offer. They said, "We'll pray about it." The Lord answered their prayers by bringing them to PCC. In addition to serving on PCC's voice faculty, they also continue their traveling singing ministry. Their beautiful, inspiring music and testimonies warm the hearts of Christians in churches across America.

Ray and Ann are available for concerts in churches.

Building a mindset for missions

Imagine trying to build something without using tools. Hammers, nails, saws, and tape measures are essential for taking a builder's plan from dream to reality. However, tools cannot get the job done on their own. They are made to be used.

PCC's Mission Prayer Band (MPB) is a spiritual tool. More than just a student-run organization that educates about missions, it is a tool that God uses to build an awareness of others' need for the gospel. Each week, hearts are stirred by presentations from guest missionaries and mission boards. "Our slogan this year is 'just one more'—not just one more to come to Mission Prayer Band, but one more to become burdened for souls," says Seth Meyers, MPB president. "Most people are willing to let others carry the burden for souls. It's easy to exclude missions and soul-winning from our daily lives and future plans."

Seth and the other MPB student leaders constantly seek new ways to open college students' eyes and hearts to missions opportunities. In recent meetings, national missionaries spoke through translators, mission board representatives told students how to secure a mission board, and a panel of missionary kids shared their experiences.

About 550 students attended MPB's vocational night as several mission boards presented needs for people from all professions. A mission board representative commented, "We were overwhelmed by the response of PCC students to a simple, heartfelt presentation of the need for the gospel around the world." Frequently, mission board representatives say that PCC students have unusually tender hearts to the spiritual needs of the world.

"We want to motivate others to use their skills to further God's kingdom," Seth Meyers states. "If people take the first step to come to a Mission Prayer Band meeting and find out what God is doing in missions and what the needs are, God will honor that action."

PCC hosts third Enrichment Conference

For pastors, youth pastors, and their wives

Delegates from 26 states and Canada attended PCC's third annual Enrichment Conference in March. Building on a theme of spiritual enrichment and encouragement, speakers addressed topics including special helps for effective preaching, church growth, and soul-winning; building a strong youth program; and textual debate questions. A fish fry at Camp o' the Pines provided relaxation followed by a challenging message by Pastor Jim Schettler—one of the highlights of the conference.

Delegates comment:

“This is the best conference I have ever attended. The messages and the teaching were exactly what I needed.”

—Pastor, Va.

“Each session was informative and challenging. We came away with a renewed zeal to serve our Lord.”

—Pastor, Tenn.

“The conference's practical, comprehensive suggestions will help me in my ministry. Thank you for putting God first.”
